

Progress Report

•The purpose of the progress report is to provide a description of the project, including:

- An outline of the project's purpose & aims
- Details of the research methods being employed
- A literature review
- Details of progress to date, and a plan for completion

- Another purpose is to encourage students to start preparing the thesis well before all the project work has been completed
- As a rough guide, the progress report should be in the region of 15 to 20 pages.
- The progress report is not marked on how much progress you have made –rather, on whether you have made an honest and accurate assessment, with sensible adjustments to your plans
